Reading Chinese Hanzi

- a Pocket 3-Step Guide

Preface

Learning to read the Chinese language is a formidable task. Ask any Chinese child! The most effective means to remembering or finding individual Hanzi in dictionaries is to concentrate on the individual components or elements and their spatial relationships in combination. While the common assumption that one can guess the meanings of complex Hanzi from their parts is a fallacy, since in the majority of cases the minor elements were chosen for phonetic rather than semantic reasons, this of course does not detract from employing the major elements or 'radicals' as aids for recognition purposes.

The rationale for the three step approach adopted here is reinforcement by repeated exposure. For each Hanzi or compound, decide on the basic element and its location (SECTION 1), find the meaning and pronunciation (SECTION 2) and progress to the compound word (SECTION 3). As you become more familiar with each encounter then you can increasingly skip the first and second steps and go straight to the compound words. This is a formidable tool commensurate with the task at hand and the pocket size means it can always be within grasp - whenever and wherever you have a moment. However, there is only one way that it will work - if you read, read and read some more - and Use It!

Introduction

General Introduction

Some one fourth of mankind speak some form of Chinese, an independent branch of the Sino-Tibetan family divided into a minimum of five groups of dialects on the basis of structural characteristics.

The primary dialect group is Mandarin (an English translation of the old Beijing expression for official language ‘Guan-hua’, spoken by approximately 70% of the total Chinese population, living in plains of the North, Center and West. The other major dialects are: Wú, used in the major urban centers of Shanghai, Suzhou and Wenzhou and their surrounding areas on the East coast; Min, spoken by the Chinese of Taiwan and the adjacent provinces of the mainland; and Yue, primarily in Guangdong (Canton) and Hong Kong. Hakka (guest) dialects are found in scattered tightly knit agricultural communities throughout South-East China, originating in the mists of time in North China.

From the 1950s, the official language of China has been the Putonghua (common speech), based on the Beijing dialect, luckily one featuring a relatively simple tone system with only four basic tones (in contrast to Cantonese with nine!). The Romanization system adopted by the government in Beijing at the same time represents the tones using diacritic marks. In the present booklet they are indicated by symbols above or below the relevant vowel.

The Chinese characters or hànzì 汉字 originated some 3,500-4,000 years ago in the Yellow river region, examples being found inscribed on bones and tortoise shells. Initially simple pictographs like for tree, with increasing complexity, symbolic ideographs and were devised. Most are combination of two or more simple elements or radicals, each having some meaning related to objects in the environment. With standardization, certain characters came to have a phonetic role in defining pronunciation.

The characters are here also provided since any deeper understanding of the language will depend on an awareness of how the written system is constituted - especially with the simpler forms they will also give you a greater appreciation of how everything fits together.

Types of Hanzi

Chinese characters fall into distinct categories which are illuminating as to how they were slowly derived over time. The first is the pictograph, or a simple picture of a physical object like a mountain 山 (shān) or mouth 口 (kǒu). The symbol expresses a simple abstract concept like up/above 上 (shàng) or down/below 下 (xià), while the ideograph is a combination of two or more symbols or pictographs providing a particular meaning in combination, like water 水 (shuǐ) every 每 (měi) for sea 海 (hǎi). The pictographs and symbols are the elements of the present booklet, the focus for identifying a particular hanzi and finding its meaning in the present pocket guide. It should be remembered, however, that the vast majority of hanzi combine semantic with phonetic elements so that it is not usually possible to infer the meaning from the individual components employed.

The Three-step Method

The rationale for long-term learning with the three step approach adopted here is reinforcement by repeated exposure. For each hanzi, decide on the basic element and its location (SECTION 1), find the meaning and reading (SECTION 2) and progress to the compound word (SECTION 3). As you become more familiar with each encounter then you can increasingly skip the first and second steps and go straight to the compound words. This is a challenging tool, forcing you to think in terms of the individual components of hanzi at the same time as experiencing the roles that elements play, whether semantic or phonetic. The author hopes that it is commensurate with the admittedly formidable task at hand and the pocket size means it can always be within grasp - whenever and wherever you have a moment. However, there is only one way that it will work - If you read, read and read some more.

Pronunciation

The entries for pronunciation (fāyīn 发音) in the present English-Chinese dictionary are basically given with the standardized Pinyin system but since this does not allow actual sounds to be accurately produced it is essential that you concentrate a great deal of attention on the explanation given below. Each syllable has at least one vowel, which has a tone as well as the pinyin reading. In most cases there is an initial consonant and there may also be final consonants, although these are not stressed.

Initial Consonants

b, d, f, g, l, m, n, r, s, w, y
as in English
c ts as in its
ch chye as in birch
h hard h as in Bach
j j as in jar
k hard k as in cat

Final Vowels (+ Consonants)

a ah as in father
ai ai as in eye
an ahn as in barn
ang ahng as in bang
ao ao as in cow
e short uh as in curt ei ei as in eight
eng eng as in length
er err as in burr
i ee as in teen
ia ya as in yahoo
ian yen as in yen
iang yang
iao yow
ie ye as in yes
iu yo as in yo

p hard p as in pass
q ch as in cheers
sh sh as in sshower
t hard t as in tank
x sh as in shy
z dz as in beds
zh dje as in Geronimo

o o as in more
ou oh as in toe
ong oong
u u as in fool
ua uah as in what uai uai as in why
uan o as in more uang o as in more
ue ueh with short eh
ui uei as in weight
un un as in bun
uo uoh as in woe ü ü as in über
üe üeh with short eh

Syllables have no or one of four tones in Mandarin Chinese, as indicated in this dictionary by none, high, rising 'ˊ', 'ˊˊ'.

The System - Classification of Hanzi

The system used for the present book corresponds to that in the Concise Oxford with some modification. Wherever possible the groupings have been subdivided as to location within the hanzi to allow speedy access, but for assistance where the number in the group is very large, the stroke number has been followed.

For classification purposes, characters have been divided so that the listed component is:

- 1) on the left side (páng 旁);
- 2) on the right side (yòupáng 右旁);
- 3) at the top or head (tóu 頭);
- 4) at the bottom (dǐ 底);
- 5) surrounding frame (kuàng 框);

The “radicals/elements” in their various locations are listed below for reference and then alphabetically with their associated meanings in different forms in Section II.

Natural Elements

First to consider in our hanzi element survey are the physical elements themselves, earth and water, wind and fire. The first, tǔ 土, forms the basis of a relatively large number of compounds, being found either on the left (tǔzípáng), over (tǔzitóu) or under the remainder (tǔzidi), with the connotation of ‘ground’ or ‘of the earth’. The hanzi for water, shuǐ 水, undergoes simplification to three dashes termed sāndiǎnshuǐ “three dot water” 氵, for example in juice or zhī 汁, located on the left of water or liquid related ideograms (shuǐzípáng). Water in its solid form as ice or kouri implies stiff or freezing when observed on the left in lěng 冷 meaning cold (lěngzípáng). For our purposes wind or fēng 风 does not form an elemental basis for other hanzi, but fire or huǒ 火 is found on the left in a squeezed form in a number of flame-associated hanzi (huǒzípáng).

The sun or rì 日 may be discerned on the left (rizípáng), above (rizítóu) or below other components (rizidi), in many cases imparting the feeling of bright or shining. The moon, yuè 月, is also present in altered form 𠄎 in a small number of hanzi, generally on the right (yuèyòupáng). This should not be confused with an identical appearing element on the left which is derived from the hanzi for flesh as described below. Light rays may be encountered as three slanting lines on the right, for example in colour (cǎi 彩). Rain or yǔ 雨 is found at the top of almost all ideograms dealing with the weather (yǔzítóu).

The physical surroundings have been an obvious source of inspiration, with fields or tián 田 found above below or on the left, and mountains or shān 山 either on the left or above, in geography associated ideograms. The basic element in the metal-related hanzi is that for gold or money, jīn 金, always located on the left side. A similar situation exists for stone or shí 石 where its appearance on the left denotes rock-like attributes. The tree or ki 木 is present in a very large number of hanzi, in the majority of cases on the left, but also less frequently below (ki-ashi) or above (ki-gashira). Split wood is present in two forms on the left as 片 or 壯 (kata-hen). Continuing with the plant kingdom, the very important role that the ubiquitous bamboo or take 竹, played in the Far East in days gone by is reflected by its presence in a simplified form above other elements in a range of hanzi, particularly in those related to writing, as in brush 筆. The humble shell or kai 貝 also occupied an essential position in society, with its presence under or on the left, very often applied to signify financial affairs or payment.

Man and the Body

Man or ren 人 forms the essential element in a very large number of ideograms, being located as an upright figure on the left as in 仏 (nin-ben) or above as in 合 (nin-kanmuri). Woman or onna 女 similarly plays an elemental role denoting a female relation when observed on the left (onna-hen). The mother or haha 母 and child 子 pair may also be used in accessing a small number of ideograms (haha-ashi and ko/ryou-zen). The latter grouping has been used as a depository for a number of visually related hanzi based on a simple form (了) which means understand.

Going on to the parts of the body, we start off with the head or atama 頭, whose right hand portion originally meant head and subsequently page and is located in the same position in a number of related hanzi (ougai-tsukuri). The simple eye or me 目 is generally found to the left of other components in sight related compounds (me-hen), while with the addition of a pair of legs to make see or miru 見 it adds this connotation when on the right or below (miru-tsukuri-ashi). The ear or mimi 耳 plays a similar role for the auditory world being found on the left (mimi-hen). The mouth or guchi 口 is readily recognizable on the left (kuchi-hen), above or below (kuchi-ashi-gashira) other components in a reasonably sized series, and the tongue or shita 舌 is present in a small number of hanzi on the left (shita-hen). However, the most numerous of the speech-related ideograms include the say or iu 言 character which forms a basic element on the left for a long list (gon-ben).

Regarding the limbs, the hands or te 手 denote a myriad of activities that one would expect from such versatile appendages, with the squeezed element either being located on the left (te-hen) in the vast majority of cases or below (te-ashi), examples being utsu 打 for hit, and ageru 举 for lift up. Related is show or shimesu 示 generally on the left but sometimes below. The most simple representation of legs forms a handy recognition base for a few hanzi, as for small children 児, but of far more application is the hanzi for foot or ashi 足, which when observed on the left gives a stepping or dancing connotation. Go or iku 行, enclosing from two sides, signifies movement. Also movement associations are indicated by nyuu elements enclosing like an L-shape from the left and below, like noboru for elongate 延, advance as in ou or pursue 追, and run or hashiru 走.

Hanzi for internal organs can be recognized by the presence of flesh or niku 肉, on the left, somewhat simplified so that it resembles the moon, as in hada or skin 肌 (nikuzuki). The heart or kokoro 心, itself forms a major component in two long lists of feelings-related ideograms, in one of which it is simplified and located on the left, as in kowai or scared 怖, and the other present below (kokoro), well exemplified by okoru or angry 怒. Bone or hone 骨, is also used, on the left (hone-ben), in a small number of directly linked cases.

Housing and Household Items

For a place with a fixed roof, for example a residence or taku 宅, this was represented by a simplified roof itself placed above (u-kanmuri), this generally indicating something or an activity taking place inside. Other types of dwelling were represented by a leaning roof as in government office or chou 庁, this featuring as the top left portion of a number of hanzi (ma-dare). Enclosure may simply be indicated as a roof and two walls, like in surroundings or mawari 周 (dou-gamae). The gate or mon 門 features in an appreciable number of ideograms, including those for open and shut (mon-gamae) and a door itself or to 戸 can be found giving some associated meaning on the top and left of a few hanzi (to-dare).

Regarding household utensils, a bowl or dish, known as a sara 皿, often carries the connotation of serving when found below other elements (sara-ashi), while denoting less specific meaning located above (ami-gashira). A container gives shape to a few hanzi like kan the ideograph for canned goods (iremono-ashi), but for our recognition purposes the lid or buta of a cooking pot, a horizontal line with a handle, is very much more frequent, found at the top in a long list, as in ichi or market 市, often without any obvious connotation (nabe-buta). A box lying on its side finds occupation to denote enclosure (hako-gamae), as for example in hiki 匹, the counter for animals. The personal stamp, an important item in East Asian society, is located on the right of the hanzi for seal or mark, shirushi 印 as well as a number of other related ideograms (fushi-zukuri). The sign for cloth, as on the left in ho or sail 帆 (fuku-hen), is found in a few hanzi, and the lowly thread or ito 糸, plays a recognition and connotative role in a very large number, located below (ito-ashi), or more frequently on the left (ito-hen). Clothing made from these items, or koromo 衣, also features as an element in various wearing-related ideograms, usually on the left (koromo-hen), but sometimes below (koromo-ashi).

Animals

Starting from small animals there is the insect or mushi 虫 found on the left, right or below. Somewhat larger is the fish or sakana 魚 located on the left and the small bird, a representation of whose wing is found in a small series of Hanzi either above (furutori-kanmuri) or on the right (furutori-tsukuri), as in osu 雄 and mesu 雌, for male and female animals. The ideogram for feather or wing itself, or hane 羽 can also occasionally be recognized, generally above (hane-kanmuri) with bird or tori 鳥 itself being found on the right in a few cases (tori-tsukuri). The dog or inu 犬 is present in a few Hanzi in that form (inu-tsukuri) but plays a more prominent role signifying animal in general when simplified and located on the left, as in hunt or karu 狩 (kemono-hen). The horns component of sheep or hitsuji 羊 is used for our present purposes as an easily recognizable upper element in a number of hanzi (hitsuji-futa) without any specific connotation. The cow or ushi 牛 and the horse or uma 馬, both generally found on the left (ushi-hen and uma-hen), on the other hand normally do have significance in terms of the meaning. From the earlier used ideogram for tiger or tora 虎 the upper and left portions can also be encountered with semantic content, as in tyrannize or shiitageru 虐, in a few cases (tora-dare). Skin/leather or kawa 革 is an occasional observation on the left (kawa-hen).

Weapons and Transportation

The sword or katana 刀 is found in various positions, and the spear and javelin rudiments, as in fight or tatakau 戦 and bu or military 武, can be observed enclosing from the top and right (hoko-gamae and shiki-gamae, respectively). The lance finds employment on the right of Hanzi as in korosu or kill 殺 (rumata-tsukuri) and the bow or yumi 弓 and arrow or ya 矢 serve similarly on the left (yumi-hen and ya-hen) to denote related meaning. To cut is signified by two vertical strokes, located on the right (rittou), as in separate or wakareru 別, whereas the element to strike, on the right, gives the connotation of activity (nobun), for example in renew or aratameru 改. The vehicle or kuruma 車 may also be found on the left in a series of ideograms related to transport (kuruma-hen) and a ship or fune 舟, again on the left (fune-hen), generally denotes meanings associated with this form of floating carriage used for trade or war.

If all else fails then the stroke count is a valuable aid, as indeed used in the present study in place of an alphabet to determine the listing of ideograms with the same dominant element in Section 2 or the same ON reading in Section 3. Therefore all the hanzi covered have also been included in an appendix, listed with reference to their stroke number, with rules for stroke order.
